Academic & administrative experience:

- I have developed, taught and administered a wide variety of undergraduate and postgraduate courses in history, international studies, development studies, and African studies at the University of

SABELO NDLOVU

Zimbabwe, Midlands State University (Zimbabwe), Monash University (South Africa/Australia), The Open University (UK), University of South Africa (South Africa), and University of Bayreuth (Germany).

- I have successfully supervised masters and doctoral dissertations and theses in decoloniality/decolonization, African history, African politics and African development studies. Some of my doctoral students have ascended to senior lecturer and professorial positions in universities in Zimbabwe and South Africa.
- I have developed new courses/modules for undergraduate and postgraduate study and contributed to curriculum development in the fields of African history, international studies, development studies, African studies, and African political economy.
- I have published widely in the form of sole authored books (8); edited volumes (12); peer-reviewed articles in journals (over 60); chapters in books (over 60) and many other popular publications.
- Throughout my academic and intellectual career, I actively participated and presented papers and keynote addresses on various important topics covering African studies, decoloniality/decolonization, epistemic freedom, African history, African politics, development, and decolonization of knowledge. Since 2012, I have developed a repertoire of presentations and invited keynotes focused on epistemological issues and transformation of higher education as well as articulation of the meanings of decoloniality and decolonization.

Leadership experience:

- Academic leadership dates back to the time I worked as part of three pioneering lecturers at the newly established Midlands State University (MSU) where I was actively involved in the designing and development of the History and Development Studies (HDS) Degree Programme from scratch in 2000, followed by my appointment as Section Head of the Department of International Studies at Monash University in 2007 and then Founding Head of the Archie Mafeje Research Institute for Applied Social Policy (AMRI) (2012-2015).
- As the Founding Head on AMRI, I provided strategic leadership to the setting up of the research institute from scratch including development of strategic and operational plans, day-to-day management of its research activities, personnel, finances, and assets. I represented AMRI at the College of Graduate Studies (CGS) Executive Committee and became a member of the UNISA Senate (2012-2015). It was also during my tenure as Head of AMRI that I founded Africa Decolonial

Research Network (ADERN) which introduced decolonial thought, theory, and practice at UNISA.

- Since January 2016, I have led the Directorate of Scholarship in the newly established Department of Leadership and Transformation (DLT) at UNISA located in the Principal and Vice-Chancellor's Office and actively participated in the development of DLT Strategic and Operational Plans as well as its 'Leading Change' initiatives designed to transform the very idea of the university, scholarship, culture, systems, leadership, and communication. I led CMU in developing a clear understanding of various discourses and grammars of change such as Africanization, decolonization, indigenization, diversification, and transformation.
- Since January 2018, I have been appointed to the overall leadership of Change Management Unit (CMU) as Acting Executive Director to drive the UNISA transformation/decolonization agenda including drafting institutional transformation plan, change management strategy, reporting to the University Council and University Senate on progress, milestones, and challenges to the transformation/decolonization drive across the entire university. I participate in relevant committees of council and senate and in all this; I lead discussion on transformation/decolonization and report on the transformation agenda. On top of this, I regularly met with the Principal and Vice-chancellor on issues pertaining to transformation/decolonization while at the same time giving regular seminars and workshops on transformation/decolonization at UNISA in particular and South African universities in general.
